Frederick William Burton: For the Love of Art 25 October 2017 - 14 January 2018

Introduction

Frederic William Burton: For the Love of Art presents a rare opportunity. Charting the life of a man whose very existence was defined by art, the exhibition tells his story through the extensive collection of material that survives him. Sketches, drawings, paintings, artworks produced and acquired, designs and decorative objects, artefacts, personal letters and ephemera; all brought together under one roof. Collectively, these tangible things lay testament to the rich and varied chapters of Burton's life, and offer visitors not only the expected prospect of engaging with completed masterpieces, but also the unexpected chance to explore unfinished and preliminary works. Such items are seldom seen but vital to the artist's creative process and of real merit in their own right.

Working in pen, ink, chalks and watercolours, Burton regularly produced preparatory studies in the time-honoured fashion exemplified by the old masters. The combined display of objects he referenced and the careful studies he made, alongside exquisite finished works from key stages in his career, serve to make visible the course of a craft honed over time, and the resulting remarkable expertise. In addition the inclusion of a selection of masterpieces acquired during his directorship at the National Gallery of London and a number of works by those who influenced him, result in an exhibition exceptionally rich in story, skill and value.

This programme broadly considers Burton's life and work, and explores distinctive aspects of the exhibition. Core activities for all ages and interests such as talks, tours, and workshops are freely available for the duration of the show. More in-depth strands are also offered, including a study-morning, library and archival display, a lecture series dedicated to the Pre-Raphaelites, and art appreciation and watercolour courses focusing on Romanticism and Burton's exemplary technique as a painter.

Recognising the potential and significance of Burton's practice for children and young people, this programme has an extensive offering for Teachers, Schools and 16+ audiences. This includes tours, workshops and resources designed to compliment the curriculum, and courses to assist portfolio development. Additionally, in order to support contemporary artists and facilitate accessible engagement with wider audiences, there are innovative collaborations, two special long term projects and a new regional programme of activities which will bring Burton back to the West of Ireland.

Although Frederic William Burton's life was defined by art and his name and works are known to many, his life and legacy is known to few. Through this dedicated programme, built around a unique exhibition, we aim to shed light on an individual who made such a significant contribution to the art world, and to a life lived 'for the love of art'.

Thursday Evening Lecture Series

Onsite | Adult

Lecture Theatre

23, 30 November, 07 December at 6.30pm

€10 Single Ticket - €25 Season Ticket

Booking Essential

Focusing on the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, their circle and the art of the Victorian period, three specialist talks will take place on Thursday evenings from 23 November.

As an artist based in London, Burton encountered the work of the Pre-Raphaelites. Their influence is clear in his own work, which may be seen in the exhibition. But who were the Pre-Raphaelites? Why did they cause such a sensation in the art world? And why does their work continue to polarise opinions today?

Christopher Newall, a specialist on art of the Victorian period, will look at the formative relationship of John Ruskin and the Pre-Raphaelites, Colin Cruise will examine pre-Raphaelite drawings in detail, and Elizabeth Prettejohn, a leading expert on the art of the Pre-Raphaelites will speak on how they became very modern masters.

Tailored Tours and Workshops for Schools

In addition to our regular tours for school groups, a special series of guided tours with workshops have been designed with the relevant curriculum in mind for primary and secondary pupils. These tailored visits are led by members of the NGI's Education Department, FREE of charge and take place on Wednesdays and Thursdays for the run of the exhibition.

Primary Schools

Teachers and pupils will be led through the exhibition by one of our tour guides, and then asked to consider their experiences in a fun story-telling workshop. Connecting to the Primary Curriculum and with the emphasis placed on story as one of the five principal contexts through which oral language can be approached, this workshop will encourage expressive literacy skills, developing children's abilities progressively through the process of looking and responding.

Secondary Schools

Junior Cycle and Transition Year students will be offered a guided tour of the exhibition, followed by a unique opportunity to develop analytical skills while viewing ephemera from the Gallery's archives that relates directly to the exhibition. In line with the Junior Certificate History Syllabus, this workshop will encourage students to develop the skills essential to the research and writing of history through locating historical information from a variety of primary and secondary sources.

Senior Cycle students may choose from one of two tour and workshop offerings which explore either the Renaissance or Irish antiquity in relation to Burton's work. These tours and workshops provide an excellent opportunity for students to engage with primary source material, sketch art works, and take informed annotations, as well as to find a source of potential inspiration when interpreting examination themes. A resource for each offering will be made available online and to participating teachers. The Senior Cycle strand is researched and devised by Dr Sarah Wilson.

Please Note: Senior cycle students are asked to bring their own sketchbooks with them on the day.

1. Irish Antiquity and Frederic William Burton: Wednesdays @ 2pm

This offering provides an exciting opportunity to combine a visit to the National Gallery with the National Museum of Ireland. Beginning in the National Museum of Archaeology, Kildare Street, the guide will discuss key metalwork pieces from the Museum's collection including the Cross of Cong and the Tara Torcs. After highlighting the techniques, manufacturing and use of these objects, students will be afforded the opportunity to make sketches of those pieces which inspire them. The group will then proceed to the Burton exhibition in the National Gallery. Here, the guide will conduct a tour of the exhibition and note the influence Irish antiquity had on Burton's choice of subjects and his approach to mark-making.

2. Frederic William Burton and the Renaissance: Thursdays @ 2pm

This session explores the links between Burton's work and the Renaissance collection housed in the National Gallery's Beit Wing. In addition to heavily influencing the Pre-Raphaelite circle with whom Burton was acquainted, Renaissance art featured prominently in Burton's tenure as Director of the National Gallery in London. During this time, he acquired works by Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael and Botticelli. These links are made apparent to students through a guided tour of the Burton exhibition. This is followed by a visit to the Centre for the Study of Irish Art where students will have the rare opportunity to view the original sketch books Burton compiled while travelling through Italy. Facilitated by the tour guide, students can then follow in Burton's footsteps and study first-hand the Renaissance Masterpieces of the National collection.

Primary Schools: 10am – 11.30am

Junior Cycle and Transition Year: 12pm – 1.30pm

Senior Cycle: 2pm – 3.30pm

Booking and Dates:

Every Wednesday and Thursday excluding Mid-Term Break until the Christmas Holidays. Free of Charge. Must be booked at least two weeks in advance. For further information T: 01 663 3510 or E: tours@ngi.ie

The colourful embroidered Kimono-style wrap with gold threads that sparkles in the exhibition has been rendered in exquisite detail in Burton's portrait of Mrs George Smith. It is the culmination of a life's work in rendering colours and textures in a realistic manner. First gaining an understanding of both anatomy and the stylised human form, participants will be encouraged to take inspiration from the portraits in the exhibition and brainstorm ideas to rough sketches. These rough sketches are then transferred to croquis and rendered to a fashion sketch applying the texture, colour, pattern and details with the help of various art materials. All materials provided.

The Romantic period of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries which framed Burton's life (1816 -1900), witnessed a profound change in artistic practice. The dawn of the Modern world saw the Romantic painters push the boundaries of traditional art, infusing it with a spirit of individualism and freedom. Join Dr Sarah Wilson's 10-week course exploring this period of social and political upheaval, when rationality and reason were challenged by imagination and emotion.

Using primary source material from the NGI, and focusing on the Burton, Orpen and Turner exhibitions, in addition to works in the Permanent collection, participants will uncover the literary, philosophical and at times violent influences behind Romantic art. As Romanticism is an extraordinarily broad movement, this course will include examples of Irish, British, French, Spanish and German art. Each meeting will consist of a themed talk, followed by an examination of relevant artworks from the National Collection. A certificate of completion from the National Gallery of Ireland will be awarded at the end of the course.

Regional Programme

Into the West

To increase the opportunity for engagement with regional audiences, for this exhibition we have devised a strand of programming which will take place in the West of Ireland, a place close to Burton's heart featuring heavily in the exhibition. Working with NGI outreach facilitator Helen Monaghan and exhibition curator Dr Marie Bourke, this regional programme will offer talks, workshops and projects in centres, museums, galleries and schools in Galway, Clare, Sligo and Kerry.

Sew Last Season Community Engagement and Outreach Project

Sew Last Season is a community sewing space in Galway city where participants from a range of backgrounds can learn and share sewing skills and techniques for upcycling and recycling garments and textiles. The participants will explore Burton's drawings and paintings, including visiting the exhibition in Dublin, and over a 7-week period create textile works in response. These works will be displayed at a workshop in Galway City Museum in January and photographed for NGL social media and website.

Helen Garvey, a Galway-based Fashion and Textile designer and lecturer, will give a short talk about textile and design in 19th-century Galway when Burton was working in the west of Ireland. She will then lead an embroidery workshop using details from Burton's work as starting point. No previous embroidery experience necessary, all materials provided.

The pieces produced by Sew Last Season participants in response to the Burton exhibition will also be on display during the workshop.

Special Projects

Frederic William Burton: For the Love of Art is a rich and varied exhibition which can be engaged with in many ways. In order to support this engagement, two leading contemporary practitioners; one musician and one visual artist, have been invited to engage with the exhibition for a sustained period of time and create new work in response through a series of special projects. This strand is devised specifically to allow the exhibition to be considered in a new light, to encourage connection with diverse audiences, and for historical artists and artworks to directly inform and inspire artists making work now. Both artists will be supported throughout the creative process via continual access to the exhibition, contact to the NGI archive, library and related collections, in dialogue with curators, conservators, contributors to the programme and the education team.

Making Marks Matter Joe Caslin

Born in Roscommon, Caslin is a street artist, illustrator and art teacher. He completed an MFA in illustration receiving a distinction at the Edinburgh College of Art - University of Edinburgh in 2012 and has previously read at National College of Art and Design, Limerick School of Art and Design and National University of Ireland, Galway. He has taught art at secondary level for the past ten years while maintaining a prolific art practice. He was the recipient of the Association of Illustration award for New Talent in Public Realm Illustration 2013, in 2016 he received a 'Next Generation Bursary' from the Arts Council of Ireland alongside funding from the Trinity College Creative Challenge and is represented in collections both nationally and internationally.

The innovative murals Caslin is best known for appear to spring up overnight. Both visually commanding and powerfully subtle, these towering works of art appear like pages from a massive sketch book across the architecture of Ireland's cities. Beautifully rendered and potent in their simplicity, the lofty drawings are more than just visually arresting street art. Each project engages directly with the social issues of modern Ireland, responding and commenting on events taking place in the surrounding community and beyond. Caslin's murals during the 2015 marriage equality campaign directly referenced Burton's The Meeting on the Turret Stairs and came to define the love and tenderness the political change sought to honour and protect. His most recent project entitled, 'Our Nation's Sons' addresses drug addiction, homelessness and mental health through his tender and compassionate work.

For this collaboration with the National Gallery of Ireland, Caslin will expand his visual art practice through taking inspiration from Frederic William Burton: For the Love of Art. Spending sustained periods drawing directly from the objects and works in the exhibition and exploring related collections in the NGI library and archive and the NMI, Caslin will use the exhibition as a primary resource to create new artistic work. Through his highly accessible practice Caslin is perfectly positioned to engage a broad audience, and in particular young people, with this exhibition and to communicate its potential. His process will be documented and made visible online via both the NGI and artist's digital platforms.

Bad Romance Lisa O'Neill

"At a time when sameness threatens to drain the world of charm and surprise, Lisa O'Neill stands tall for difference, as an outlier with a mission to frame the world as she sees it and to perform it accordingly. Her voice is her own. No small achievement." This quote from the Irish Times captures what many express in relation to Cavan born singer-songwriter Lisa O'Neill. Over the years she has quietly but steadily built a reputation for herself on the Irish and international scenes and built a strong following with her unique folk sound, strong song-writing and distinctive voice. Her debut release 'Has an Album' was followed in 2013 by Choice-nominated 'Same Cloth Or Not'. Her third and most recent album 'Pothole in the Sky' was released to critical acclaim and is filled with tension and emotion, contextualising themes of love, loss, heartache and sorrow today through referencing tales from the past with beauty, honesty and defiance.

League's O Toole likens O'Neill to "a musical version of Flannery O'Connor" with "a remarkable voice, a Cavan twang, a growl, a song-call. . . . sprite-like, but with an old soul singing. . . the kind of voice that might sit as easily on a Carter Family recording as it would an avant-folk crank artefact. It's a tender and expressive instrument, but possesses a midlands Irish flintiness. More to the point, it suits the subject matter and songs."

Many of the works in Frederic William Burton: For the Love of Art attend to folklore and Storytelling, but also to unrequited love, heartbreak and ache. . . bad romance the oft-recurring theme in Victorian Art. This is particularly true of Burton's best known work The Meeting on the Turret Stairs which depicts Hellelil, who fell in love with her personal guard Hildebrand, Prince of Engelland; a romance doomed from the beginning. The subject of the painting is taken from a medieval Danish ballad which was translated by Burton's friend Whitley Stokes in 1855. Today the painting is better known than the ballad which inspired it, but can the artwork inspire new words and contemporary music around this age-old theme? In this special project, musician Lisa O'Neill will take inspiration from The Meeting on the Turret Stairs and the wider Burton exhibition. The new music produced in response will offer an alternative point of engagement and reflect a highly personal contemporary reaction to this well known and loved art work. The project will culminate in a live performance at the gallery.
