Virtual exhibitions

What’s in the resource?
Digital exhibitions allow us to visit museums and galleries across the world from the comfort of our own homes or the classroom. Some, like the Gallery’s virtual tours, attempt to replicate the experience of physically visiting the Gallery. We can navigate through the rooms, see where paintings are placed on walls, and experience the architecture of the building. Others, like Drawn from Nature, present a selection of digital images alongside text written by a curator.

How do I use it?
If you are unable to take your class on a visit to a Gallery, then you could set up a virtual tour in your classroom.

- Make it interactive - use look and respond questions & pair with other resources such as audio guides to aid your students in exploring the gallery.
- Set a treasure hunt - have students explore in pairs or small groups. Give them three things to find. These could be general items like ‘a hat’ or ‘something blue’, or more specific ‘a painting by Joshua Reynolds’. They could then use the Gallery website to research their artworks and present to the class.
- Discuss the architecture of the galleries - how does visiting a virtual exhibition compare with going to a gallery in real life?
National Gallery at Home: step-by-step activity videos

What is the resource?
Step by step activity videos inspired by works from the national collection. The videos were designed as at-home family activities, but can be adapted to be used in the classroom.

Who is it for?
The majority of the videos are aimed at Primary level, Junior Infants - 4th class, but may be adapted for different ages and levels.

How do I use it?
In this guide, we have provided links to a selection of videos, alongside looking and responding questions, further activities and curriculum links. All materials and activity instructions can be found by clicking the link to the video. We are regularly adding more videos, and you can find them all on our website.

Look & Respond
These questions are designed to help introduce students to the artwork. See what clues you can find in the image to help you find the answers. Often there is no ‘right’ or ‘wrong’ answer as everyone will see different things in an image. A good prompt question to help students look closer is to ask ‘what can you see in the picture that made you say that?’
Van Gogh's Rooftops in Paris

Introduction
Van Gogh painted the view from his window in Paris, using perspective to show buildings close up and far away. He painted the muted colours of the buildings and sky on an overcast day in Paris. This activity takes inspiration from van Gogh’s painting and enables students to create their own artwork based on their view from a window.

Look & Respond
● What can you see in this painting?
● Where do you think it is set?
● What perspective/point of view is it painted from?
● What colours can you see in the painting?
● What time of day/year do you think it is?

Further activities
● Is this somewhere you would like to visit?
● Do you like this painting? Why/why not?

Further activities
● Use some cardboard to create a simple viewfinder. Go outside and use it to frame more ‘windows’ to make views from.
● Turn your picture into a postcard and write a letter to a friend to tell them about what you think about when you look out of the window.

Curriculum links
● Visual Arts: Paint and colour; Looking & Responding
● Primary Language: Oral language

Make your own camera obscura

Introduction
This activity enables students to make a simple camera obscura, inspired by the early type of camera used by artists. Light came through a tiny hole and flipped the image upside down. Johannes Vermeer may have used one when he painted Lady Writing a Letter with her Maid.

Look & Respond
- What can you see in this painting?
- What are the people doing?
- What do you think the woman sitting at the table is writing about?
- What do you think the lady stood by the window is thinking about?
- What are they wearing?
- What can you see in the background?
- What title would you give to this painting?
- Do you like this painting? Why/why not?

Further activities
- Find out more in our Medium, Materiality & Magic photography resource
- Experiment with light and make a photogram

- Visual Arts: Paint and colour; Looking & Responding
- Primary Language: Oral language

Profile Portraits

Introduction
Antonio and Piero del Pollaiuolo were brothers who ran one of the most successful workshops in Florence, Italy, in the fifteenth century. They worked as painters, sculptors, engravers, goldsmiths and designers of embroidery. They often worked together on projects, so we're not 100% sure which brother made this drawing of a young man. It was drawn some time between 1470 and 1475—that's over 500 years ago! It is a "profile portrait" which means it shows the side of the man's face, not the front. Your profile is the outline of your face, seen from the side.

Look & Respond
- What is this artwork? Is it a drawing or a painting?
- What can you see in the drawing?
- What colours can you see?
- What is the person wearing?
- What do you think they are looking at?
- What might be hidden on the other side of their face? Use your imagination!
- Do you like this drawing? Why/why not?

Further activities
A profile only shows one side of your face. Use a mirror to flip the image and use your imagination to draw what might be hidden!

Sensory Activities: step-by-step videos

What’s in the resource?
Step by step activity videos inspired by works from the national collection. The videos were designed as at-home family activities, but can be adapted to be used in the classroom.

Who is it for?
These activities will engage the senses and are particularly suitable for those who seek out sensory input. They may be adapted for different ages and levels.

How do I use it?
In this guide, we have provided links to a selection of videos, alongside looking and responding questions, further activities and curriculum links. All materials and activity instructions can be found by clicking the link to the video. We are regularly adding more videos, and you can find them all on our website.

Look & Respond
These questions are designed to help introduce students to the artwork. See what clues you can find in the image to help you find the answers. Often there is no ‘right’ or ‘wrong’ answer as everyone will see different things in an image. A good prompt question to help students look closer is to ask ‘what can you see in the picture that made you say that?’.
Sensory Spots

Introduction
Inspired by Paul Signac’s The Terrace, Saint Tropez, students will be enabled to create their own spotty masterpiece, using paint made from natural ingredients. Signac developed a style called Pointillism. He used lots of little dots of colour to make his painting. When you look from a distance the colours blend together and you can see the whole image.

Look & Respond
- What can you see in this painting?
- What colours can you see?
- How has the artist added colour to the painting?
- Look closely at the painting. Now step back and look from a distance. How does the painting change?
- Where do you think the painting is set?
- Do you like the painting? Why/why not?

Further activities
Experiment with different materials to create other pointillist pictures - what effects can you make using paint, chalk, or even collage?

Create your own ‘stained glass’

Introduction
In this sensory activity, students will be enabled to create their own ‘stained glass’ artwork inspired by the work of Irish artist Evie Hone.

Look & Respond
● What can you see in this artwork?
● What is it made out of?
● What colours can you see?
● What shapes can you see?
● Where might you find an artwork like this?
● Do you like this artwork? Why/why not?

Further activities
Explore light and colour using a torch and different coloured sheets of acetate. Shine the torch onto a wall and observe how it changes when you shine it through different colours. How do the colours change when you layer them on top of each other?
